

SOFHT Media Pack

Overview

The Society of Food Hygiene and Technology (SOFHT) was established in 1979 as a voluntary organisation of independent food industry specialists committed to representing the views of all involved in food hygiene, food safety and technology across every discipline.

SOFHT's main aim is to keep its members advised of emerging and topical issues through the delivery of technical support, training and events. It has a strong focus on the practical application of knowledge and expertise and supports those on the front line of the industry with a Technical Support Centre. It also acts as a vital forum for networking and a hub for sharing ideas and best practice throughout the entire food chain.

Members include a cross-section of people from food manufacturers and their suppliers, retailers and caterers to environmental health professionals, research organisations, training bodies and students, for whom membership is free. The membership delivers a wealth of tangible benefits that can have a significant impact on your business and our wide range of resources and activities offer technical and commercial advantages that provide substantial added value to any company or individual within the fast-changing food industry.

We provide a host of training and accredited courses, both classroom-based and online as well as an e-learning program, to keep food businesses operating safely and legally - each delivered through our dedicated SOFHT Training Academy. Unrivalled networking opportunities including Members Forums, Elevenses and conferences throughout the year, as well as the Summer Lecture and Annual Lecture, Lunch and Awards, offer the chance to gain new contacts, and cement existing relationships. There are also a variety of opportunities to promote your company and services including sponsorship of events, adverts, e-shots and links to your business on the members page of the website: <https://sofht.co.uk/our-members/>
